Visual Studies Workshop with University Center at Buffalo

A Program in Photographic Studies at the Visual Studies Workshop in Rochester offers an MFA degree through University Center at Buffalo. The program differs from other photography programs at State University of New York campuses in two ways. First, it allows students utilization of the extensive and varied resources and facilities (which shall be briefly considered below) of the Visual Studies Workshop, an organization distinct and separate from the SUNY system and involved in a variety of educational, research and public service activities in its own right in "the study and understanding of the role of the visual image in our collective cultural experience." Second, the primarily graduate Program is "workshop" oriented, an alternative structure conducive to intensive and field oriented professional training emphasizing problem assessment within the field and an interaction between the activities of a specific workshop and the needs of the profession as a whole.

Since the Program's inception, concurrent with that of the Visual Studies Workshop in 1969, when a small number of students were admitted on an experimental basis, the Program has grown to seventy-five students participating in numerous and varied workshops. Nathan Lyons, Director of both the Program in Photographic Studies and the Visual Studies Workshop, describes the two-and-a-half year Program as "one of the largest graduate programs in the country which specializes in photography, mixed media and museum studies." In the first year, the student is involved in "various kinds of image formation and transmission"; in the second year, a concentration of work and final project in the student's specific area of interest followed by a six-month internship related to the student's area of concentrated effort. Interacting with four other educational programs at the Workshop, the student becomes one of the Workshop's wide range of resources by way of a work-study system, instructing and/or maintaining and expanding the facilities while professionally developing through training in the real working situations the Program affords.

The Program, according to Professor Lyons, is "based on the broadest conception of photography as the present technology of the visual language," and the variety of facilities utilized and activities participated in by students bear witness to the Program's extension beyond the realm of traditional concepts of photography. The Visual Studies Workshop's Research Center has a "living museum" with over 8000 books, 250 magazine titles and 100,000 images for research purposes. There are also Conservation and Restoration Programs, a hand bookbindery and Program for Museum Studies, a Travelling Exhibition Program of sixteen shows and a Workshop Gallery, a Media Center with some activity in film, video and slide/tape productions and presentations, and a Publications Program producing the periodical Afterimage and numerous visual books including a Reprint Series in a Print Shop capable of color and a variety of black-and-white and other printing processes, including xerography, thermography and telecopier systems.
